

Press Release

StarFire™ 7500

John Deere improves receiver availability

John Deere has redesigned its current StarFire™ receiver technology and moved to a different board design with an adjusted set of micro-electronics. This improves its availability for farmers and avoids supply chain issues.

As a result, the receiver has been re-named StarFire™ 7500. The change will have no effect on the technology's functionality, reliability and signal performance, which is the same as for the StarFire™ 7000.

The new name helps to prevent any possible confusion – for example, when carrying out software updates. For customers already using the StarFire™ 7000, nothing will change. Both receivers have the same design, along with having the same pricing, signal offerings, and license structures. The StarFire™ 7000 receivers will continue to receive the usual support through quality updates and software fixes.

